Abengoa strengthens its international leadership of electricity transmission and distribution projects

- Engineering News-Record (ENR) has just published its renowned ranking of the leading international contractors of 2012, in which Abengoa holds some of the top positions.

Seville, December 26, 2012. Abengoa (MCE: ABG.B), the international company that applies innovative technology solutions for sustainable development in the energy and environment sectors, has been recognized for the sixth consecutive year by the prestigious magazine Engineering News-Record (ENR) as a leading "international contractor in transmission and distribution" in 2012.

For the first time Abengoa also leads the cogeneration category, as well as being number one for the second consecutive year in the ranking of solar energy contractors.

In this year's edition, Abengoa also appears in the top five companies that carry out operations and maintenance activities (O&M) thanks to its strong commitment to this market.

This annual ranking incorporates details of the world's leading engineering and construction companies, which are selected based on their gross revenues. The list includes the top 225 international contractors.

ENR, which is owned by The McGraw-Hill Companies, is one of the most prestigious technical magazines in the sector, providing important and relevant information, news and analysis for specialists in the sector. It also covers financial, legal and safety issues related to the environment and company management as well as labor issues associated with the construction industry.
