

Abengoa is recognized as CDP leader in its climate change management in Spain

- Abengoa has been awarded the “Best Voluntary Responder in Spain” award that the Climate Disclosure Project (CDP) grants to companies in the country for their climate change management.
- It is one of the most important acknowledgements for policies that fight against climate change in the private sector at a global level.

25 October, 2016 - Abengoa (MCE: ABG.B), a global company that applies innovative technology solutions for sustainability in the energy and environment sector, has been awarded for its leadership in the fight against climate change by the Climate Disclosure Project (CDP) Southern Europe.

CDP is dedicated to raising awareness worldwide about the global impact that companies, states and regions are having on the environment. For another year, they wish to acknowledge the efforts that Spanish companies are making with regard to their climate change programs, as well as the leadership that has been displayed in managing such programs. Notably, Abengoa has been awarded in the category Best Voluntary Responder in Spain and Portugal for being the company that has performed in the most excellent way in the area of climate change among the companies that have voluntarily taken part in the CDP program. Abengoa has obtained the A status, the highest level in the ranking.

For the last seven years Abengoa has participated in the CDP climate change program and their efforts in this area have been recognized and awarded on numerous occasions. And precisely it is throughout its history that the excellent environmental management and fight against climate change has been intrinsic to Abengoa’s own business and is present in all of its activities and areas.
