

Abengoa certifies its Occupational Health and Safety management system and renews its quality and environmental certifications for its subsidiary Abenewco1

- Occupational Health and Safety (OHS) management has been certified under the new ISO 45001 standard, which replaces the OHSAS 18001 standard.
- In addition to the certification on preventive matter, it has renewed its quality (ISO 9001) and Environment (ISO14001) certifications.

April 23, 2021 - Abengoa, the international company that applies innovative technology solutions for sustainability in the infrastructures, energy and water sectors, has successfully completed the corresponding certification and audit process under the new international ISO 45001/2018 standard, which replaces the OHSAS 18001 standard and certifies that its subsidiary Abenewco 1 has an Occupational Health and Safety management system aligned with the requirements of the aforementioned international standard.

Additionally, Abenewco 1 has also renewed its certifications regarding the ISO 14001 (international standard for environmental management) and ISO 9001 (international standard for quality management) standards.

With the OHS system migration from OHSAS 18001 to this new ISO standard, the fact that it shares the high-level structure of ISO has facilitated concordance between the different management systems implemented in the company, reinforcing the concept of integrated management system.

The external audit process has been carried out by Aenor and at the end of this the certifying entity has highlighted, as a strong point, the commitment of the top management and the management team in the effective implementation of the Management System and, in particular, the related with the OHS.
